FREETS AGAIN IN THE JAIL

Joseph and Ellen Freet, of Conewago Township, Accused of Taking Goods from House at Witmer's Park. Brought here.

Joseph Freet and Ellen Freet, of Conewago township, Adams County, were arrested by Officer Gluck, on information of S. T. Witmer, of Hanover, charging them with larceny. They are now in the Adams County jail.

A search warrant, issued by Justice Lilly, of Mechanicstown, was placed in finding a box of stolen utensils, principally dishes, in the Freet home which were claimed by Mr. Witmer as his property.

The defendants were given a hearing before Justice Lilly, after which, in default of bail, they were committed to jail for the action of the grand jury.

The articles in question, Mr. Witmer claims, were stolen last February from his summer home at Witmer's Park, on the Little Conewago creek. A second search of the Freet home revealed still more of the dishes.

Last Summer the two Freets were tried before Adams County jail charged with assault on each other. The matter never came to trial, however, and the defendants were dismissed.

The lads wear the Shriner button, of which they are very proud; they are armed only with toy pocket knives that Father gave them and a "billy," which the younger lad carried.

Their father went hunting with Roosevelt in Oklahoma in, 1907 and showed him how to catch wolves with his bare hands. The Colonel became good friends and Roosevelt appointed him United States marshal at Guthrie.

FACTORIES INCREASE

The industrial statistics are now being gathered in connection with the thirteenth decennial census and will show enormously growth in Gettysburg and Adams county. The census for York and Adams counties is in charge of Edward Grist. Mr. Grist and his assistants expect to conclude the work in Adams county in about 20 days and in the district in about 10 days.

The department of commerce and labor had records of 2,362 establishments in the two counties. The special agents are covering the three quite a number which were not included in the government list. The census will include returns from about 250 to 400 concerns more than were in existence when the last census was taken in 1900.

The schedules being filled out for the industrial census impart information relative to capital, salaried employes, wage earners, value of the finished product and the amount of fuel consumed in a year.

TANNEY TAUNTED

"The President" was called upon to go to my district to save my friend Ingalls shouted Mr. Mann, of Arkansas, in the House of Representatives Tuesday, when Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, the former Adams County blacksmith, taunted him with having recently gone home because he was afraid his constituency would not send him back to Congress. Mann referred to President Taft's Western trip and his visit to Winona, the home of Tawney, to make a political speech designed to give Minnesota a clean bill of party health.

Although Mr. Mann's time had expired and he had been informed of the fact by Mr. Mann, of Illinois, who occupied the chair, his wrath had been aroused to such a pitch that he would not take his seat until warned that the regents of arms would compel him to be in order.

Mr. Tawney said that in view of Mr. Mann's "great indignation" he would not say anything in reply.

Rodgers. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John McNery, of Woodstock, Virginia. The marriage took on account of a recent death in the bride's family was a very quiet affair only the immediate relatives being present.

UGLY BLAZE IN NEW BUILDING

New Gettysburg National Bank Building Scene of Fire Sunday Morning. Timely Discovery by Mr. Bender Prevents Trouble.

The timely discovery of a blaze in the new Gettysburg National Bank building on York street Sunday morning prevented what would doubtless have been a very serious conflagration had it gotten beyond control. The fire burned in the woodwork of the floor, smoked the marble of the vault and caused considerable anxiety until its real extent was learned.

The discovery of the blaze was made by Mr. Edward M. Bender, cashier of the institution, who happened to get into the building about nine o'clock Sunday morning. As soon as he opened the door he found that the room was so filled with smoke that it was impossible to see more than a few feet. Mr. Bender's first thought was that some one had started a fire in the building plant and he started toward the rear of the building.

At the east side of the vault he found the trouble. A pile of excelsior and other inflammable material had caught fire in some unknown way and was burning rapidly, the floor was burned and the fire was eating its way into the vault at the lower corner under any woodwork. Mr. Bender started at once to put out the blaze when he found that the heat of the metal of the vault was at great heat. He realized that to put the fire out he undoubtedly would likely crack the handsome slabs and considerable cash would have been lost.

The flames were finally put out and then an effort made to get the smoke from the building. This was quite a while for the place was literally filled with it.

Two theories were advanced as to the origin of the fire, one that it started from spontaneous combustion caused by the benzine and wood alcohol in the excelsior and the other that it was with the other refuse. The other theory is that some men who were in the building early in the morning might have dropped a lighted cigar in the excelsior.

The discovery of the fire was most fortunate as practically all of the handsome mahogany furniture is in the building and the woodwork would also have been badly burned had much more headway been gained. The building itself is fire proof and could not burn.

CLASH WITH OIL COMPANY

Piping of water from the heart of Pearl of the Park spring at Mont Alto, to the state tuberculosis sanatorium there, has resulted in a clash of interest between the Atlantic Refining Company and the state. The spring, although of great purity, does not feeds a stream which the Standard Oil Company has been using for its pumping station, and decrease of supply is regarded as infringement of the Standard's rights.

The sanatorium was among the sufferers from last year's drought, and a supplementary water supply was decided upon as necessary. The pumping station had barely enough water for its needs during the dry spell, and a contest between the commonwealth and corporation is expected.

USED UNIVERSALLY

CORTRIGHT METAL

WHEN Corriaht Metal Shingles were first introduced (24 years ago) you had some excuse for being sceptical: But now—

If you are sceptical it can only be because you do not know the facts in the case.

They are used today from the Atlantic to the Pacific for all kinds of buildings, under all conditions.

They are fireproof, stormproof, never leak and last as long as the building itself without needing repairs.

She Ate It

By SHEILA ESTHER DUNN

Copyright, 1916, by American Press Association

In Belgium the month of May is known as the Virgin's month and entitled to the Virgin Mary. In the province of Liege during May young girls have a pretty way of learning whom they shall marry. A group of maidens arrange to meet at sunrise, each provided with a cherry tree cross to a hedge, and, selecting a spot unobserved by the fairway, they choose a honeysuckle bush beneath which is a smooth, grassy plot. Each girl then selects three blades of grass, cuts the tops to an equal length and to each ties a colored thread of silk. Black represents a bachelor, red an unknown lover and green a widower. Each girl ties her heart wishes to marry. Ten days afterward they return to the spot where they left the blades growing, and that blade of the three which has grown highest represents the lover that is destined for the maiden's husband.

Three lived in this province a poor girl named Jane Lefevre. She was an adopted daughter of an old couple who received a small farm. Jane was a fair complexioned, fair haired, blue eyed maiden, and few years' hence plainly manifest in her countenance. The neighbors knew that she was a much larger one and owned by a farmer named Gerbaut, with his son, Hellegot. Hellegot DeRoode was at the university at Liege, but he would come to his father's estate in the adjoining farm. When he returned in the spring he was so in love he hung about the old adjoining cottage that he could not keep from him that he could not tell whether she was courting him or not. Jane replies, he brought the image nearer and discovered what she was pressing her cell his "Shadoma."

From that time when he would see Jane on the porch of the house or back in the field he would go to his own watch her through his glass and long to go out and offer his help.

His vacation came to an end, and he departed without a word to Jane. He was done, whom he had been used to intruding on, and she was left to her own devices. On the morning of his departure he was obliged to go to the village to get on his pack, to which he delicious spring air. The sun was just rising, and the dew was glistening in the branches of the trees. Hellegot was in no hurry, so he walked slowly along the road, looking from time to time at the fields and trees.

Starting out of his retreat, scraping that he might not be seen, he went crawling on the soft grass to the hedge. On reaching it he heard coming from it a few yards distant on the other side Jane soft voice. She was singing. Hellegot was speaking.

"I am in the bachelor," she said, "I take a thread on a spear of grass. Now, I'll choose a lover. 'Yes' and 'this,' tying a third, "in my dear love's."

"And who is your dear love?" asked Anne, who was sitting on the ground on blades of grass.

"John De Rivel. Who is yours?"

"I can't tell you; it is so foolish of me."

"You needn't. I know already. It is the handsome young lord of the Rhode place."

Anne made no reply, but Hellegot, having found an opening now his strength to see her face, he put his eye to a blank encouraged her features.

He was astonished at a girl whom he had not suspected of having been aware of his existence and filled me with the greatest delight that she had taken him into her imagined lover.

Having tied the three grass reed out them to a uniform length the two girls went back to the family and resumed their studies departed for the university.

At Amsterdam several years later Hellegot and the daughter of a rich people had received a small legacy and had used it to purchase a farm. As Hellegot DeRoode did not betray the fact that he had been Anne's lover, certainly did not mention that he had looked at her through a hedge, nevertheless he yielded to an irresist ible impulse to "make love" to her.

In Holland if a young man wishes to win the hand of a girl he generally begins a sweet cake, takes it to her house and in her presence cuts it and places it on a table before her. The family after which the girl, with or without the girl, if she accepts him, eats the cake. If she refuses him she returns the cake on the table.

Delicately cut cake and laid it before Anne. A blank came to her cheek, and she put out her hand to take it. Was she yielding to a natural sensation, or did she some reason for hesitating? Hellegot said to her:

"Am I not to be of the green thread?"

The blush on her cheek deepened to scarlet, and she put her face in her hands. At last she said:

"Tell me how you learned about the green thread."

"I will if you will tell me about how you came to know anything about me."

"You must first tell me how you knew about me," she replied.

She smiled, thinking that he had been looking at her through a spyglass. He took up the cake and handed it to her.

She ate it.

BACCALAUREATE TO GRADUATES

Rev. B. W. Sherrick Preaches Annual Sermon to High School Seniors. Earnest and Forceful Discourse. Friends Filled Church

The baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Gettysburg High School was preached Sunday evening in the United Brethren church by Rev. G. W. Sherrick who had for his text a portion of 2 Peter 1 : 5, "Add to your faith virtue."

Rev. Mr. Sherrick said that in the general acceptation of the term virtue meant personal integrity and purity of life, and that literally it meant courage, strength and that the apostle Peter would result in efficiency and attention to duties in practical life.

The relation of one's faith to their actions was brought out in the early part of the discourse. Accordingly as a man believeth or thinketh in his heart, so he is." If man does not believe in the agency of God in the universe he must necessarily fail to see the hand of God in the beauties and wonders of nature.

Treating virtue in its intricate sense Rev. Mr. Sherrick said that it meant a strong conception of truth and duty, a high ambition in life, concentration, a settled resolve and of principle, active operation and organization of facilities. Without the working together of a person's faculties there can be no self control. The conscience should be in touch with the will to form true conscience and every other power with the will. In this way all of one's energies are controlled by God and a life of virtue must follow.

The minister spoke at some length upon the necessity of religious aspirations. He showed that many of the temporal things must not be despised, that they are necessary to life and that many one does not see to be of use has a competence. This, however, must not interfere with one's own religious duties and convictions. There is a special danger at the present time of this present age when the dollar is the uppermost thought is the times of so many. A desire for wealth is higher range than this mere financial betterment and success.

The soul that looks to higher things will always realize that God is in this place, has always been in the universe and that there is always a chance for a fellowship.

The conception of heaven and hell as important factors in life was dealt with. Equally important is one's conception of the life they should lead to get to heaven. Both heaven and hell exist here on earth and our character must be formed. If God is not known we reach heaven we will be no strangers when we enter there and we can at all times recall. The man with the bad character "will go to hell as a greatic rock dashes to the bottom of the sea."

Rev. Mr. Sherrick spoke in an impressive and earnest manner and held the close attention of an audience which filled every seat in the church auditorium and Sunday School room. He closed with this admonition to the graduates:

"Make your life round and complete and succeed in inner completeness. Complete is outward life. Your life will then be one of happiness and an influence for God."

TUBERCULOSIS IN ADAMS AND CUMBERLAND COUNTIES

The Livestock Sanitary Board of Pennsylvania inaugurated Dr. M. Morikofer, of Harrisburg, with headquarters three hotels of cattle, 9 head owned by Mr. D. S. Shepbaugh, near Centre Mills, 2 head owned by Edward Clark, near Fountain Dale, and 8 head owned by Jay E. Gardner, Cumberland county. Out of the three herds 17 reacted to the test. They were appraised and slaughtered and dispos d of in the usual way. The owners will realize two thirds of the actual value of the cattle slaughtered.

FEEDING POTATOES TO STOCK

Cumberland Valley farmers are finding old potatoes good stock on their hands, and some of them have many bushels in the bins. Last Fall when the potato market was high they held their potatoes for better prices, and now that the market is over stocked, little or nothing can be secured for them. There is so little demand for the home grown product that the potatoes are being fed to the stock.

ROADS MADE OF OIL AND GRAVEL

They Are Very Durable But Costly for Heavy Traffic.

MEANS OF CONSTRUCTING ONE

Much Care Required in the Selection of Stones Used—Keen Judgment in Mixing, Rolling and Spreading the Substance is Necessary For Best Results—Not Used Thoroughly.

The highway commission in the state of Massachusetts desired to construct a high class road of oil and gravel during some experiments in road building.

A section of the state highway that was in a dilapidated condition was selected for the experiment. The old surface was loosened up with steam road grids, then shaped up with shovels and rolled down with a steam roller, but no gravel was added to the old stone being loose rather than the ruts formed in wagon tracks on top of the bituminous gravel surface.

The surfacing, which was of the mixture, followed and consisted of seven grades of composition described concerning the possible the comparative properties of materials that have already been tested.

They found a gravel pit near by consisted in worth of the broken stone for heating were set up on the road and the stone was broken by hand. The gravel was screened, separated into three sizes and the stone over one inch were thrown out as being too large.

About eighteen gallons of oil per cubic yard of stone was used. The oil and asphalt were heated separately in two tanks from 300 to 400 degrees F., asphalt being generally hotter than the oil, one tank being taken to him by overlooking in the bottles. The heated oil was then sprinkled over the old surface, both directly followed by the highway commission and the stone used for heating the oil had a capacity of 300 gallons and the two tanks having capiait a capacity of 225 gallons.

The gravel was then sand were distributed separately by means of thin iron boxes/shovels held on the shoulder of wood fires. The stacks were about ten feet long and the boxes were filled with about eighteen inches apart and parallel with each other. The gravel were used or put on was thrown over them to a depth of about one foot, and after being loaded with the stone approximately of 225 degrees F. the stacks, with the fire still burning, were left to of the heated gravel or sand, laid down in another place and again covered with the mineral to be heated.

The mixing of the oil, gravel and sand was done by hand shoveling on wooden or steel mixing platforms. The wooden as first, but on the asset, which was much better, requiring less labor.

The heated sand and gravel in the above proportions were measured out on the platform by means of a measuring box. But oil in small quantities, per-

(From Good Roads Magazine, how were a huge steam roller was used. The mixture was thrown over the hot mineral, were a steam shovel was used. The amount of oil added and turned, then the full quantity of asphalt added and thoroughly mixed until practically as soon cooled to see that was not thoroughly cooled and there were no lumps, and no concentration of the oil. The mixture covered into the carts and hauled to the road.

The temperature at the mixture at the resulting was found to be about from 250 to 270 degrees F. It was shoveled from the carts to the road, dumped over the steaming board and shoveled back into piece. The heat remains were sufficient to evaporate correctly from the cart. Perhaps it was because there was so much heat that the men could do all the spreading. All the rear portion was carefully raked and shoved into the bottom so as to reduce the to the depth of the finished course. Next

To obtain the most perfect result the surface should be kept off for a while, which need not be longer than twenty-four hours after the surfacing, when the rolling would be completed.

Good to Remember.

In planning road improvements it should not be forgotten that when a road is once improved with macadam or gravel the travel immediately doubles or treble, and the road surface must be sufficiently strong for a low absorbing impetus to kill all such animals that are found "doctored" or badly lame or diseased.—Rural New Yorker.

GO SLOW ON BROOM CORN.

High Price of Crop Tempting Many Farmers Into Untried Field.

The extremely high prices of broom corn has aroused a widespread interest in the crop, and Prof. D. Cruser of the University of Illinois. Broom corn belongs to the same family as sorghum, Kafir corn, milo maize and Jerusalem corn, all of which are classed botanically as Andropogon sorghum. It differs from the other members of the genus in having the seed heads with much longer, straighter, stronger straws or panicle bodies. Normally it grows to a height of six feet.

Broom corn growing now is and will always remain a small industry because the demand for the crop is comparatively limited, but small. This crop, like all the sorghums, is a heavy feeder and a grainer of general farming practices. According to Professor Cruser, the world's consumption of brush is less than 200,000 tons, of this brush is used but for one purpose there can be no sudden increase in the acreage required. The total world's supply could be produced on less than 125,000 acres the territory and men equipped for and seasoned in broom corn growing already could easily handle this present production if the demand warranted.

Broom corn is marketed wholly in the bale. Throughout central Illinois there are numerous jobbers and commission men who do nothing but handle this crop. Because of dishonest practices in baling, loose dealers and factors operators are cautious about buying from unknown or questionable sources of supply.

Handsome broom corn is selling for as high as $200 per ton many novices who are attracted by the high prices will plant extensively this season. Without a reasonable knowledge of the requirements of the crop and without the special equipment necessary for its successful growth the cost of this extensive planting will be an enormous disappointment to many, some of which will be of very inferior quality.

The broom corn crop usually takes a new line of business because being unfamiliar with the crop notice the money. It is the man who thoroughly knows the business that sticks to it through high prices and down to another place and again succeed with the mineral to be heated.

The mixing of the oil, gravel and sand was done by hand shoveling on wooden or steel mixing platforms. The wooden as first, but on the asset, which was much better, requiring less labor.

HOW HE GOT AWAY.

By T. ANTHONY TWINING.

(Copr. 1911, 1913, by American Press Association.)

"Watt's that story, Nevin, about your escape from Morro castle during the Spanish-American war?"

"I never escaped from Morro castle," said Nevin, "and consequently never didn't you?"

"Then I was captured while on picket by a troop of Spanish cavalry. The captain was a fellow I knew. They send with me, so he left me with an old Spanish soldier to guard me. Fortunately, telling him that he would be back that way in a few days and if he did not find me there he would burn the house and tear up the little garden that he was cultivating, he got me out and had to live on for a year."

"Why didn't you escape when you when he came back, did he?"

"No, he didn't."

"You told a plan, I'm told. Probably I shall get by plan, though I had plenty of time. I was principally worried lest I should be taken with the police. You know Spaniards are the most cruel people in the world, and Campeneol beat all the rest of them. I had a narrow escape once when I was captured, and he won it from me by a game of cards soon after the other. He played fair too. I watched every move and could not detect a bit of crookedness in fact, he was so good that he beat me nearly every time I played. Well, I was taken to the police station and officials such as clothes, money, my watch and all, but I'll admit, there was only one thing I didn't play. Yair about. You see, I had got some money and with my head a way to get out of this fix?"

"What?"

"Some mines and a lead pipe."

"Explain."

"I'll not see any connection between the two, do you? But there was. The mines were the proof of shaking dice. I taught him poker dice, and he taught me a game called mines. He was ready to play for anything he had. I lost him my watch and a few dollars, nothing available, though I had plenty of money in my clothes. The point about money is is the way kings pay into people's hands. I had been playing with him one day to relieve the tedium, for I hadn't learned enough Spanish to get the language and, suddenly looking up, I saw him with a short pipe running through the room. See?"

"No, I don't."

"Dice and lead meant loaded dice in the pipe. Well, I thought I would draw my check for a lot of money and I had nothing to write with beside dice. Sure thing."

"Sure thing what?"

"I don't pretend it was. Didn't I tell you I had plenty of time? Well, I made the biggest one! Well, that was too important to risk losing, so I asked him to let me have a pencil. He was ready to play for anything he had, so he handed me his pencil. Well, that night I was clapping the lead pipe, which I had filled with lead, and stuffing in the lead. Campeneol lent me his pencil, and I wrote down what I wanted it for. He was so jolly sure of himself."

"Then?"

"I should think you could have obtained that for yourself."

"Sewage! He never took his eye off me. I had to do it when he was not looking at me, and I had to do it at a glance. You see, I was a surrogate on his team and I knew that if I lost he will have more time to settle and do my, and the Spanish people are mixed dry weather better. If the sod does not grow sufficiently during the burn, but much good, will be done. Plowing of sod is not to be done by disking well after plowing is blue sward.

Sanctify the Name Grounds.

Properly planting the right kind of trees, shrubs and vines will make the grounds remain much more than mere ground. They will be a beautiful object side. It is cheaper to beautify the home grounds than to allow them to go bare and unbeautiful. Decorating the grounds around the home is equal to a house. It makes the home a place to be proud of, and gives the grounds it with such evidence of loving care. Such surroundings are an incentive to the feeling that people have for their home, and they are not merely exist there.—Journal of Agriculture.

BREVITIES.

Scandal is a very effective solitaire game.

You to one there is a surplus of lawyers. Some of them are not worth their salt.

Fifty-seven varieties of fish are found in the waters of Nova Scotia.

Many a man who is a success in business loses his self respect.

A Pennsylvania woman burned her husband's wooden leg on the way to the cemetery to keep it from a relic hunter. The judge upheld her.

Many of us, if people cannot get beef, pork or mutton at fair prices they will not have any meat. Chicken is the only meat to-day.

The figures show that 162,000 persons attended the various farmers' institute meetings in New York last winter. Of course many of these attended several sessions.

In England the trade in worsted or "corn" city horses has become so bad that a movement is on foot for a law authorizing inspectors to kill all such animals that are found "doctored" or badly lame or diseased.—Rural New Yorker.

PIANO BOX COLONY HOUSE NO. 1.

PIANO BOX COLONY HOUSES.

The chicken man is on the lookout for bargains in lumber, for this "up-to-date and knicker carpenter" is often building coops and nests and needs a few hatch here and there.

Then there is day when the old planing mill bell sings and bursts to give away, but knobbies now sell at a premium.

The scorchopper often helps out with county house, crates and barrels, and the egg farmer's customer often buys them with "empties" on return from market.

A piano box is a special prize to the boy scout hunting it.

It generally sells for 50 cents to $1.00, is made of good mortised boards and is so shaped that a window and door added convert it in more than a good colony house, or, if cut lengthwise into two equal parts, two nice sitting hen coops may be made of it.

The ordinary piano box is just right to accommodate fifteen to twenty-five weaned chicks, according to breed, and is about right size for heading.

A large window in front, a roosting arch and a plank to slip over to keep out rain, ventilators high upon each end for air and an outlet in front make it custom.

Track wheels or runners may be added to facilitate moving from place to place.

FEATHERS AND ECONOMICS.

A farm of 172 acres has been purchased for a poultry plant near Bogota, N. J., by George B. Ford, the municipal expert. Electric incubators and 1,000 brooders will be used.

When Paul Bergestock, a Pennsylvania farmer, reached a limekiln where he had been burning lime, next to the one of his hens roosting on the nest under the roof, he took her by the nose to roost there the night before.

California sends 2,000,000 dozen eggs annually to the Canada line into British Columbia annually. Between 1909 and 1910 the crop has increased 20 per cent, and she has ceased to export.

Mrs. Sarah Ann Dorsey, of Ohio, went or die in the breeding pens during the hatching season, and it is a matter of mystery to their owners. Its nearly always a case of overfeeding. The breast follows deep themselves of food which the heavy laying hens gobble. Better feed that rooster by himself once a day during the breeding season.

Recently a new incubator is heated up a chunk of solder will sometimes drop down into the lamp burner and cause a big smoke, and on discovering the trouble you cannot find the solder to indicate that the heater leaks, but not so. Where a drop of water is used, the dog, thinking to lay up for winter, will dig a hole in the side of the meaty bones and hide them. This attracts crows and rats, and they will make regular trips to the premises for the meat and the dog becomes super they help themselves.

We are told that 100,000 eggs are required to fill a battleship. John Bag-home has gone of three to six piece. Tommy Tompkins has a pet hen which used many of the rest are on those lines. Mrs. Jones's pullets lay. Mrs. Jones's eggs are ruined to keep down overfeeding.

Young Leghorns are extremely curious about anything new. They seem to be in spite of you and of course get a dose of lice. They are especially apt to expert at jumping into open water vessels.

When a duck is repeatedly visited with chicken it is time to consult a doctor. Before beginning anew it is wise to locate the pens on new ground or to fumigate the old coops and plow and spade the yards and keep no fowls for a season.

"Where does all the feed go?" asks the chicken raiser whose hens are stingy, though fed well, and he is told that it is all turned into it likely making blood for mine and lose its Appearance Deceitful.

She had all the remarks of a crass misogynist, and it therefore occurred to the lady to interview him. Here was one whom he could say to his heart's content. After luncheon time when all the men were in the office, seemed the best time to show what a way he was.

Tipping them that he was going to the house for a few days, he said, with "Oh, kiss 'I, I heard the female sex always loved to be kissed, so I get off a time honored patriarch of a joke.

It Never Comes Again.

There are few sadder words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: It might have been!
Ah, yes, how sad and bitter still and wild
To know that all is lost, the future void!
To think how fate had wrought our overthrow,
How easily it might have been, we know;
How, if a single thread had not been spun,
The web of life had been another one;
Had we been warned in season, had we seen
Our danger and our guilt, what might have been!
We are strongest and are better
Under manhood's sternest pressure.
Still we feel that something sweet
Is tugging at the heart strings
Asking for a tear unbidden,
Sobbing sweetly as it vanished.
And we sigh for it in vain.
Idly passing, idly flying,
Never still and never weeping,
But it never comes again.

According to Formula.

Judge Pennypacker was once a candidate for the Republican nomination for judge of court for the town of St. Hunnybun. He went to the local editor and made the request in the judge's car. The editor, who was a friend of the judge, at first grasse without the suggestion of a formula which he thought the judge remembered.

"Put your application in writing and post it to the court in a proper manner."

Pennypacker, thinking the judge's insistence upon regularity in the merely matter of form, sat down at court, wrote out the request and handed it to the clerk of the court. The latter passed it to the bench. The judge read it and then indorsed it and then interrupted the pending trial long enough to say:

"Application for a leas of 65 made to the court and granted."

What the Sandwich Was For.

A stately old professor was approached by a rather crabbed boy in the college corridors. Trying hard to keep back a smile, the young man asked:

"Professor, you say you are on to a sandwich. Now, what is a sandwich?"

"I claim that I am, my boy."

"Well, then, I'll tell you why I am the man who has seen London on a four days' visit. I have been on a four days on a foggy day are like a last year's bird's nest."

The professor strolled for a long time in meditation, and finally, when he proved to be wrong. Finally, at his wit's end, he asked:

"I give it up."

"Tell me, and tell the other.

"Give it up," repeated the professor. "Why, you don't mean to tell me that you are the man who has seen London on a four days' visit and the other has missed the sandwich? Come, tell me."

"Of course I do, you lunatic! Run away and don't bother me with fool."

After the youngster had recovered from a spell of laughter he chortled: "Oh, that's what you bite on."

Almost Too Far.

"Very good reparies—very good—but you're getting personal."

The speaker was a prominent actor. His listener:

"It reminds me of a dialogue at the Lambs' Club between Jack Barrymore and a Scot.

"Jack said the Scot, bearing that you the pool had a press agent. 'Ish, you mean publicity agent,' corrected Jack, 'not for notoriety'

"The Scot tossed back his long locks fiercely.

"Well,' he cried, 'an itch for notoriety is better than a notoriety for—'

"'Say it,' said Jack, 'don't hesitate!'

"'Than a notoriety for—' said the actor, 'I asked the simplest words I could think of.'

Heroic Courtesy.

A French writer on "The Revolution, Terror and Napoleon" recounts the following as an amusing instance of what he calls courtesy of the time: "Percy, having invited to dine with him a marquis and a count, the latter arrived the accordiers of the army of Condo. Wishing to be courteous and not to make while he served, that of the French king, the marquis never ordered his butler to bring him a bottle of fine wine 150 years of age, 'a la cour du roi,' he said.

He opened it carefully and offered it to the marquis, saying, 'If you deem it worthy the honor, will you kindly in this bottle to the health of the king?'

The marquis tasted the wine. "How do you like it?" asked the host. "Excellent," replied the guest. "Then," replied Lord Berwyth, "drink the glass which is in full glass and drink to the health of so great and so unfortunate a king." The marquis obeyed, and everybody did so he was beaten. Only when the marquis returned to Paris did he be told that what he had drunk was only vinegar.

Home Course In Domestic Science

XIII.—Washing Day Made Easy.

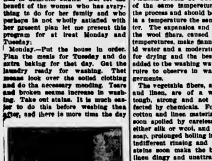
By EDITH G. CHARLTON,
In Charge of Domestic Economy, Iowa College.

Copyright, 1906, by American Press Association.

BLUE Monday" might lose some of its terror for the average family if the weekly washing were done in some other day. Steam indowed rooms, odor of boiling suds, an untidy house from kitchen to attic and "pickup" meals all day combine with the disagreeable fact of duties and cares since forever, to make Monday a dreaded day for every one. Whoever establishes the custom of setting Monday aside for a "wash day" made life just a little harder than necessary in scores of homes. And yet so dimly established has the custom become that it takes genuine courage to break away from it and wash on "Tuesday" instead. When you think about it, how much more sense in Tuesday! It is far the worst than Monday, which, following a day of rest, finds the whole house and person less disarranged.

It is very desirable and sometimes quite unwise to attempt to outline any housekeeper's work for her. One cannot know conditions and be familiar with the life of the family well enough to really competent to arrange the routine of the domestic affairs for the best benefit of the women who have everything to do for her family and who perhaps has only a few hours each day for her greatest plan let me present this program for a neat Monday and Tuesday:

Monday—Put the house in order. Plan the meals for Tuesday and do extra baking for that day. Get the laundry ready for washing. That means have all the soiled clothing and do the necessary mending. Tasks broken means increase in washing. Take out stains. It is much easier to do this before washing than after, and there is more time the day before.



RANDY LAUNDRY STOVE.

Tuesday—The special work for this day will be the washing, but it should not be carried on to the complete disarrangement of the kitchen. Some systematic meals should be served promptly at the usual hours, and the wife and mother should not be so absorbed by the washing and the clothes that she has no thought or attention for business affairs. There is no reason why she should be if the washing be not begun too early and the labor work so that it requires almost superhuman effort to accomplish it. While preparing breakfast the laundry tubs may be stirred out and water heated. After breakfast and after the dishing table has been cleared the washing can be commenced, and if it is performed in an intelligent way from start to finish it ought not to interfere to any great extent with the ordinary comforts of the day. The clothes were sorted and soaked over night to put to soak the day before. That means a long stride toward an early completion.

The Order of the Wash.

One reason why there are so many indifferent housekeepers and so much inferior laundry work is because either or so attention has been given to differences in fabrics. Cotton, linen, silk and wool are practically treated in the same way. The one kind of soap is used for all. They are washed in water of the same temperature. Sometimes they are washed in the same water. Often they are given the same amount of rubbing and equally indifferent treatment.

In sorting the clothes arrange them in five piles as follows:

Table linen and fine muslins.

Bed linen, towels and handkerchiefs generously soaked in ammonia and water if used for a child.

Flannels.

Colored cottons and stockings.

Soiled towels and cloths.

Put in the clothes first needing the cleanest because the dirt and make the remaining water, but only white clothes for first source can be treated in this way, and it is not well to sort all kinds of white clothes in one tub. After washing in cold water to which a good sprinkling of ammonia or a powder has been added little or no rubbing will be necessary before putting the clothes in the boiler. Kerosene used in small quantities is also a good aid in which clothes are soaked before the washing easier. The success of kerosene also depends on the kind and amount of soap used. Use a hard white soap that is not strong enough to injure the hands. Shave it fine and dissolve in boiling water. Add a tablespoonful of kerosene to each gallon of soapy water. Soak the clothes in this for an hour or less, according to the kind, strength and temperature of the water. The longer period of time the silk is left in the solution, the faster it is likely to come out. The boiler is finally dissolved. Dilute acids and alkalies will also remove stains. Thus it will be seen that all garments of silk and woolen should be washed with only the mildest soap. This should be used in a lather before putting the soap into this alloys, dissolving it in hot water to be used until a scum is which the garments are to be washed. They should be put in this and then rubbing the soap directly on the garments. This rubbing may be supplied by dry heat. Silk first stiffens, then breaks, and wool first shrinks, for which it is washed should not be hot. Flannels should be washed in water of the same temperature throughout the process and should be hung to dry at the temperature the same as that of the. The expansion and contraction of the wool from changes in the temperatures, make flannel thick. Treated in this way it is a very satisfactory material for drying and the best white soap added to the water will remove all impurities to observe in washing woolen garments.

The vegetable fibers, such as cotton and linen, are the most durable, tough, strong and are so easily affected by alkalies. For this reason cotton and linen materials are not as soon spoiled by the strongest soap as either silk or wool, and yet too much soap, prolonged boiling or rubbing, or indifferent rinsing and inattention to some one such make the fabrics of linen dingy and unattractive. One of the commonest faults in ordinary washing is that the water is not changed often enough. Sometimes a garment is washed in water so saturated with dirt that it is impossible to make it remove any more. This washing is followed by rinsing sometimes in only one water, which does not begin to take out all the dirt. For this reason, follows, as to top often does, the thinking be soaped and boiled in water that very liable to be stained with iron rust. This is also a common cause of streaks of Prussian blue is used. This case of a soft water, and with hard water the blue is not so likely to show changes to iron rust. A simple experiment to determine whether or not you are using Prussian blue is to heat a little of it in water containing a few acids. If Prussian blue the mixture will turn to a greenish color, and it will settle in the bottom of the vessel.

Iron Rust Stains.

It is more often neglect of little stains that causes permanent ones. The moin points that makes washing as troublesome as possible. Following the details may lighten the work for some housekeepers and for others prevent.

Remember to make fresh suds when the water cools. If there is any change to iron rust. A simple experiment to determine whether or not you are using Prussian blue is to heat a little of it in water containing a few acids. If Prussian blue the mixture will turn to a greenish color, and it will settle in the bottom of the vessel.

Put the clothes to boil in cold water to which a little borax has been added and stretched when there is a large quantity of water and the boiler is but half filled. Remember that the number of clothes should be put on in clean, cold water.

Blueing is very important. The best blueing is the old fashioned liquid blueing. Use soft water for first rinsing and for the blueing water, but do not soak the clothes in it. Use only enough to give a delicate tint. Do not allow clothes to lie in the blueing water for any length of time or they will be streaked.

Starch should never be added to the boiling suds, but should be made in a cool cup of laundry starch and one-quarter teaspoonful of borax and one-quarter teaspoonful of white wax to each pint of starch. Put over the fire and boil for several minutes, stirring constantly. Dextrine may be used instead of laundry starch. Thick starch may be diluted, or if a thinner starch is desired more may be made.

Skill in the completion of good laundry work and the test of the laundress. It requires a good thick rinsing blanket tacked securely to an ironing board, a clean cloth, some, a free hand, a piece of beeswax tied in a cloth and a hot iron. Rub the beeswax in a of old cloth on which to wipe these as you iron. Use a moderately hot iron and close on which to try the irons. Have in the necessary outfit, but in addition there must be precision, care and skill in hours accomplishments.

James Cornwell, President of that Place, Causes Excitement When he Shoots into a Man's House. Finally Arrested.

Fairfield, May 30—After raising such a commotion at his home that his wife fled with her children to the home of a friend, James Cornwell, president of this place proceeded to shoot holes in the roof of his house and the whole town of Fairfield Sunday morning. GRAIN PROSPECTS NOT ENCOURAGING

Reports from Rural Districts Say Outlook is not Good. Some Sections decidedly Better than Others.

Reports from various sections of Adams County are generally to the effect that indications for large grain crops are not very encouraging. Some portions of the county reports have been damaged considerably, while others are reported considerable area in the wheat and one well known farmer says that farmers will find much trouble in getting their crops around. The wheat crop will not be large, according to the reports received at this office, though of course there are some exceptions and the more fortunate farmers will get their commercy yields.

The oats is reported as very luckwarm and it is not showing up well. The corn has said to be much better, though in some sections it has gotten far enough advanced to be really for getting really good things are very few.

There was a time in the history of our country when the family was content with the home which simply afforded shelter. That was the primitive object of the home, as instinct developed and centered without questioning whether she at the center of the and in consequence both are spoiled.

Keep Rules in Failure.

To furnish a home satisfactorily and mind always remember that the of home, its location, the use to which it to be put, as well as the cost of its furnishing. Not a single piece of furniture should be purchased without some thought as to whether it is suitable for the home and in use, or whether it will be in harmony with furniture already in it.

When a woman has sufficient money to furnish completely and on short notice the home completely from cellar to attic it is an easy matter to give a perfect tract into the hands of a professional, economically with good results, sometimes disappointing ones. Therefore, one must consider duties carefully and decide whether one can afford time only getting the absolute necessities out that there will be no trouble or problem to solve. The latter woman, however, is the one who has more than she has to help. Remember, then, in the choice of furniture that the important thing is appropriate to the use for which it is intended and to the size and the plainness of the room, furthermore to a very small degree, and a considerable preference to the showy imitation. Have the room of ample, large but simplest form, made of perfect wood, with lines that are good. Then buy substantially carved, showy pieces Simply made pieces of furniture with carved or plain brass bedsteads will be infinitely more satisfactory than the cheap imitation of cheap tinsel wood.

The most expensive of money does not always imply a satisfactory home. Taste, which is a matter of culture and beauty, may be secured in the most inexpensive cottage as well as in the palace.

Have the light, healthy and airy, broad, generous lines. Never should it have the high, narrow, cramped roof frequently seen on crowded city streets, where space is at a premium. Such a house is dark, with small windows and porches, low ceilings, wide, low windows and consequently a short focus opening into comfortable, bountiful rooms. Such a house is a delight to live in its furnishings—should not suggest limitations in any way. The impression of prostuteness can be given by inexpensive materials, but the best inexpensive furniture, very much better than by showy materials poorly selected and performed.

Treatment of High Ceilings.

Some of the houses built forty or fifty years ago have ceilings so high to express real comfort. A room 10 by 12 feet with a twelve foot ceiling has the appearance of being extremely small, while a room the same size with a nine foot ceiling may have a very cozy effect. What is to be done with the high ceiling? The simplest and best way out of difficulty is to cheat the eye into forgetfulness of height. This may be in the right hand by the use of wall paper and by the picture molding. Paper out, the picture molding per can be brought down on the wall to the line that of the door. Then the upper part of the wall may be finished with a plain paper. Above the line the beam may be covered with canvas or burlap and then with a plain wall paper. Painted with a narrow picture molding and joining the ceiling paper, which is of brown, dropping the eye. Any of these methods will give the impression of a lower ceiling.

Borders have their place in wall decoration. They are used to good effect in rooms with low ceilings. Such a room should have a plain, light wall paper and have the wall covering extended from the floor to the angle formed by the ceiling, and here the picture molding is put on. Above the picture molding a border of any kind on a small scale is used. The border is of a contrasting color and design to that of the wall paper. Painted with a narrow picture molding and joining the ceiling paper, which is of brown, dropping the eye. Any of these methods will give the impression of a lower ceiling.

Home Course In Domestic Science

XIV.—Principles of Home Decoration.

THE subject of home decoration and furnishing is one large and it comes so closely to the individual that it is difficult for the outsider hesitates to make even the simplest suggestions, for in this case the subject is large and important because it is on the same so little understood by the average person even by those who enjoy the attractive results and often have considerable means at their command.

Some articles of furniture are indispensable to any way, but there are some pieces of furniture which are not so necessary, but which add greatly to the comfort and beauty of the home. Furniture is not to be purchased at random, but with a definite object in view. Furniture is not to be purchased at random, but with a definite object in view.

oped from early ages, when caves, rocks and the simplest forms of wood furnished the dwelling place for man. The furniture was of the most primitive kind—a few rough pieces of wood and stone to serve as seats and tables. For this reason we find the little circle of human beings. They were, however, the beginning of the highest and strongest social institutions and in the piece of timber or stone of the present home. How conditions have changed! How luxurious and how comfortable! How much more elaborate the home has become! Yet it is the same as it was in the days when those qualities which make for the best in human nature were developed. Therefore it is worthy of all the time, thought, consideration, energy and the noblest feelings that can be brought to it, for it will surely reflect the character of the people who live in it. The home is the foundation of such a nature as to bring out the best that there is in the individual beneath its roof. And a home is the home where all these ends and does do this.

Things Not to Do.

Some of the most glaring faults in the home furnishing of Americans are those committed thoughtlessly or perhaps from lack of knowledge, governed by the dictates of fashion. It is no longer necessary to have a full set of bureaus and wear on our persons, even in the most limited quarters, articles which fashion says are right rather than to adopt the style which is suited to our own individuality, environment and needs.

Just because fashion states that a piece of furniture is the proper thing to order in carpets or certain styles in draperies or in wall papers "must not" is no reason in the world why we should not have them in our homes unless they will be suitable there. Yet this is what many people do, and they and is followed blindly, with the result that beauty and comfort are sacrificed, no qualities totally ignored in many homes. Because some one in the world is full of beautiful things if one has the money to buy them, it does not also full of ugly things—things false in their construction. Many of these things made to sell with only this idea in view, and they are bought and adored by the too common expression, "It is so pretty," and they are bought for the furnishings for your home, or wearing apparel for yourself without the very most thing" has been bought and willfully to recommend it.

In furnishing like every one else to also another fault made in the home furnishing is the attempt why so many country house by to reproduce on a cheaper scale the city homes and why there are so many unattractive homes in smaller towns and country places. Ignorance of or indifference to one's own environment is another cause for lack of beauty in the home.

Again, pictures, furniture, ornaments and draperies are often brought into our home without a thought of artistic fitness. The best and the

CHANGE IN FIRM

On July 1 next, the name of the cigar factory of H. J. Roth and Co. in Mellerstown, will be changed to that of F. Topper Cigar Co. Mr. Topper was one of the founders of the firm of H. J. Roth and Co. and negotiated with Roger A. Smith, who conducted the business for a number of years under that name. The change in the firm name does not affect the policy of the business, which will be conducted as heretofore. The factory is one of the largest in Mellerstown, and both members of the firm are prominent business men.

DRAGS GIRL OVER FIELD

Falling from the back of a mule which she was riding to work, Helen, the seven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seitz, living about a mile and a half from Bendersville, this county, was dragged for about 200 yards, before she could free herself from the animal. The unfortunate girl received a dislocated hip, otherwise she escaped with only slight bruises. No bones are broken but it is feared that the girl sustained internal injuries. Dr. C. N. Wolf is the attending physician.

MR. MARTIN WILL NOT RUN

Uncertainty Regarding Senator Martin's Attitude is Settled by his Withdrawal. Other Candidates Exhibit Activity.

The uncertainty as to Senator Martin's candidacy for Congress has at last been dispelled, his name having been withdrawn on Friday. Ever since talk first started about the matter the Gettysburg Senator had been very non-committal as to what his course would be, and even after the petition was filed to place his name on the ballot Mr. Martin would not state his attitude. His action of Friday settles the affair.

Numerous newspapers in this section watched eagerly for the decision of the Adams - Franklin Senator. The Harrisburg Telegraph spoke of him as the man "who was trained not by some of his over ambitious friends for the Democratic nomination for Congress against Congressman D. F. Lafean, of York." Senator Martin at no time gave is personal views to have the petition filed.

As the time for the June primaries approaches, the candidates are getting busier into all over the county. The Democratic aspirants for the Congressional nomination are sensationally active, while the candidates for state legislators are also putting in busy days.

PLANK PITCHED

Eddie Plank, pitcher the Athletics to a victory over Detroit on Friday and all the local fans are happy. The following comments were made by the Philadelphia papers.

Inquirer: Plank had the Tigers swinging like a lock of beer signs in a forty bat gale when any one was rounding on the bases.

North American: The Tigers got bit the Quakers, getting ten safe blows to the Athletics's eight, but Eddie Plank was a very stable district. butter of the occasion when Royal Rooters were languishing around the pains. He had a little of his coin to the credit which is no staggering total, but each one come at a time when even an additional penny cut might have proved disastrous.

Press: Eddie Plank, who learned the art of cross fire pitching with color lived midgets, at Gettysburg College, invariably makes sorry obsequies of Jennings' heavy swatsmen, and yesterday was no exception. The Tigers hit the sphere into vacant spots ten times, but the Gettysburgian mowed the pennant craft through the stanza safely.

Record: Eddie Plank, though not at his best, kept the hits well scattered, and when pressed against the Tigers would have had a hard job to get a runner over the plate.

An automobile driven by Nevin Hench, Jr., of York, while going from Abbottstown to York Thursday night about 10 o'clock, turned a double somersault and Berthram Smith, about two miles from Abbottstown, and the occupants were thrown out, injuring two of them seriously. In addition to Hench, the car held Thomas Hoch Horry Lonnie, Wagner and Berthram B. M. Teel. At Abbottstown the York party met Lewis Haller and a few friends of Hunterstown, who had been down in the early part of the evening in Mr. Heller's Hanilton Grove and had been pressed stored for Hanover in their machines. Mr. Haller is the local. After arriving at Hanover and waiting some time for the appearance of the Yorkers. The accident occurred between 10 and 11 o'clock at the foot of a hill on the way to Hanover. On a sharp curve in the pike a tire was wrenched from a rear wheel. For a moment out of control the car swayed from side to side and then, according to Hoach, actually turned turtle, not only once but twice, alighting finally in an upright position. The occupants had been thrown to the highway by the violence, himself under the car, but fortunately he escaped with a few bruises.

The full extent of the damage done by the storm of Monday night in the valley of Hanover Saturday is as follows:

Two bridges on the road from Penn Mills to Glen Rock were washed away and three bridges on the road from Penn Mills to Hanover were carried down with the flood. One of the bridges was the property of J. O. Becker, another at Harry Stambaugh's and another at Ed. Lentz's.

The barn of John Naee, on the road from Iron Ore to Abbottstown, in Paradise township, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground with all its contents except the stock which were saved. On the farm of Philip Bupp, on Jacob's Mills, a large silo was burned.

Several county bridges in North Codorus and Manchester townships were injured by washouts. The state road in the latter township, near Emigsville, in North Codorus township, was badly eroded, and on Dubb's hill, in Manchester township, a part of the road were washed away. The road leading from Pallingtown to the home of Jacob Ziegler and other points in North Codorus township was washed by a landslide covering the road at one place and a deep washout at another point, making the road impassable.

The rye fields between Menges Mills and Hanover were damaged by the hail, the tall grain stalks being levelled to the ground. Many corn fields will have to be replanted. A fence corn near Iron Ore, owned by Peter Lentz, Sheriff of Adams county, had six acres washed away.

HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT

Twenty Three Gettysburg Girls and Boys Receive Diplome of Gettysburg Public Schools. Exercises Reflect Great Credit.

Before an audience of over six hundred people twenty three Gettysburg boys and girls received the High School diplomas at their commencement in Brua Chapel on Thursday evening. The exercises were fully up to the high grade of the usual local high school commencements and showed the result of the careful, thorough and skillful training which the pupils have received during their years before entering the high school and during their stay there.

The graduates occupied a beautifully decorated stage. The colors of the class gold and green had been most tastefully arranged and the pin, together with the class motto board, hung in the center. Potted plants and an abundance of the class flower, the rose, added to the beauty of the arrangement. With the warm the handsome gowns of the pretty girls of the class and the whole appearance was most charming.

Prof. W. A. Bergman has been in for the past ten days and was unable to be present at the commencement exercises. County Superintendent Roth presided on Thursday evening in his absence.

MARCH OF THE GRADUATES

The Citizens' Band played a stirring march as the graduates marched in from either side of the stage and took their places. After the invocation by Rev. D. R. Woods, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Clyde Bream gave the salutatory. His oration covered thoroughly and in an interesting manner the events of the past year and the progress of the world in the last twelve months.

Miss Ruth Miller's subject was "A Modern Crusade." The warm interschools was treated in a most interesting way and the work of the sisterhood was shown to have proved that the disease can be prevented and it can be cured and that the danger can be lessened and patients made more comfortable by the isolation of those in the advanced stage.

John Rupp, after giving a history of canoes taking in the United States and describing the canoes of this year, called the roll of the class and took the visitors and canoes of each member. Considerable merriment was occasioned by this unique idea.

Music by the High School chorus followed and proved an enjoyable feature of the evening.

Miss Marion Sheely had for the subject of her oration "Girls and Games." She compared the games of other days with those of today and showed how the dress of girls today is adapted so much more to healthful exercise than formerly. She also showed the progress of the girl's games of today and the advantages to be derived from them.

"When the Swan Came" was the subject of the oration by Miss Marguerite Weaver. The history of the Saxon race and the advent of their descendants into this country were told in a very interesting manner.

Miss Margaret Sherrick read the essay with which she captured the Daughters of the American Revolution prize for this year. The subject of the essay which showed very careful thought and study of the work was much after the "The American Revolution in Gettysburg."

After music by the Citizens' Band Edgar Shiley gave an oration on "The Public Schools—Democratic Institution." He showed the distinctively democratic characteristics of the American public school and told why it was so and why and how it should be kept so.

CLASS PROPHECY

The class prophecy was given by Miss Mary Hamilton who told by of "a magic telescope" the future of the various members of the class. She found them in ten years hence as school teachers, circus performers, a new National Hotel Company, a trolley company, authors, members of a matrimonial league, joined together for mutual protection, and members of a bachelors' fraternity. The prophecy caused merriment among the class and the audience.

Miss Vera Kitzmiller with "Despite Compounded with Energy and Industry" as her address showed in a clear and concise way the necessity of the union of the forces in the struggle for success. She was followed by Miss Jeanne Bieber who played the "Hungarian Rhapsody" as a piano solo.

The necessity of thorough preparation was well brought out in the oration of Miss Kaida Witherow on "The Man who is Ready."

Miss Blanche Stonge advanced more against us of and advocated a solution al feature to the public school building of today, which was "Today's Public School—a Social Center." She claimed that the use of the school building for various purposes would promote interest in the cause of education.

PRESENTATIONS

The presentations were made by Otho Thomas and Miss Alma Floyd. The selection of gifts was decidedly original and many suggestive were in store for the various members of the class. The gifts were covered in crepe paper as usual to the audience. The following gifts were presented, string of pickaninny beads, bottle of hair tonic, large fraternity pennant, lantern, mouse trap, hammock, top, rag-soaked bottle, sun lunette, tweezers, talking machine, slipper, pair of gloves, mirror, box of burnt rice, apron with Teddy bear, telescope, speaking leech, organ, moving picture machine, cradle and flock of chickens, horse and wagon, balloon and two pumpkin pies. The Junior class was not forgotten in the presentations and they were also rewarded gifts. The 1911 class was present in a body. Among the gifts received by that organization was Javelin Little who has always been a great factor in the High School entertainments and whose work this year was as valuable and much appreciated as ever.

Rev. Joseph S. Baker, pastor of St. James Lutheran church, made the address to the graduates and urged upon them to be industrious, to be specific, to be athletic, to be helpful and to be Godly. Rev. Mr. Baker's address was very forceful and commanded the close attention of the graduates and all in the large audience.

THE PRIZES

After Mr. Baker's speech the prizes were awarded. Mrs. Walter H. O'Neal presented to Miss Margaret Sherrick the Daughters of the American Revolution prize of $5.00 and announced that every valedictorian mention as Miss Ruth Miller and Miss Vera Kitzmiller. As Miss Miller was first honorable mention for the past three years a special prize of $2.50 was presented to her in appreciation of her efforts.

The High School Alumni prizes were presented by John Sachs, president of the High School Alumni Association. The prize of $5.00 was given to Miss Clare Moore as first honorable mention and that of $3 to Clyde Bream as second honor prize.

Prof. H. Milton Roth presented the $5.00 scholarship prize to Miss Clara Moore and a special prize of $5.00 to Miss Otho Thomas for high attendance. The recipient of this last prize did not miss a day in the six years course in school, the first three of which were spent in Arendtsville and the past three right in Gettysburg.

The honor roll of the class, made up of those who had an average of 90 per cent or more, consisted of the following: Clare Moore, Clyde Bream, Verna Hamilton, Margaret Sherrick and Marion Sheely. The other members of the class were: Otho Thomas, Charles Board, Kina Bender, Ervin Bucher, Harrison Clarendine, Earl Hartzell, Violet Fasnacht, Alma Floyd, Edgar Miller, Ruth Miller, John Rupp, Esther Thomas, Ralph Schriver, Jennes Sisler, Blanche Stonge, Otho Thomas, Kaida Witherow and Javelin Witherow. All received their diplomas from Dr. J. L. Seeker, president of the Board of Education.

The valedictory and class poem by Miss Ruth Miller which was also of great rank in the class followed and after a few remarks by Prof. Roth the class song its song and the audience was dismissed with the benediction.

Class colors followed the close of the exercises and the graduates of the High School commencement was as an end, a crown to the graduates and a credit to the corps of teachers in the Gettysburg public schools, a credit to the Board of Education and a credit to Gettysburg.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT

The first commencement of the Gettysburg Grammar School was held on Thursday afternoon in Miss Bumm's room in the Public School building. Twenty eight pupils received diplomas admitting them to the High School. The commencement exercises were held by pupils from the eighth grade taught by Miss Bumm and Miss Mary Bream. Books were given as prizes to Miss Dorothy Bream for the best general scholarship in Miss Bumm's room and to William Troxel in Miss Stock's room. Miss Ruth Hamilton and Miss Helen Musselman was given the prize for penmanship. Miss Dorothy Bream, Lillian Kissinger were given books for attendance and Miss Ruth Hamilton were presented by Prof. Roth. The innovation proved a great success and was much enjoyed by all who were present.

BOY HALTED ELOPEMENT

Mountain Children Find Man Eloping with their Sister and Vigorous Use of Stones Results in her Return.

An odd story comes from the mountain village below Fairfield, a place with a girl, who is of tender years, and persuaded her to go with him. They left home in the evening and stayed with a sympathizing neighbor over night.

Next morning they started to walk to Blue Ridge Summit to catch a train for Baltimore.

In the meantime there was much worry in the home of the girl. Her mother was particularly wrought up by the failure of her daughter to return home and when all inquiries of neighbors failed to give any trace of her she decided that the family must turn out and scour the country for her.

The mountaineers and slaves of the missing girl were pied to hunt together and they started out. The one of the medal leading toward Monterey these youngsters came upon their sister and the man who was helping her elope.

They quickly challenged him and demanded that he desist from his purpose of running away with their sister. Laughing at the request, he only endeavored to continue on his way the large sullenness.

But the youngsters were insistent. Their mother had told them to bring back their sister and they proposed proving true to the trust imposed in them. The man was a big man, as big as they could handle, and began a fistfight.

Stone after stone they threw at the man who was robbing them of their sister. Not many of them struck the mark but some did and so effectively that the man thought the engagement was soon abandoned. The fellow was bruised by the stones and he took to flight. So while the girl, probably losing her faith in a man who would attempt to run away with her his sweetheart—especially when he was to be her hero in an elopement—turned from him and returned to her home with her valiant little brother and sister who threw stone was a happy family reunion.
